JULEPS

The origins of the mint julep are clouded and may never be definitively known. One of the earliest appearance of a Mint Julep in print came in a book by John Davis published in London in 1803, where it was described as "a dram of spirituous liquor that has mint in it, taken by Virginians in the morning. The word itself is derived from Arabic julâb and Persian gulâb, meaning rosewater.

COCKTAILS

The true creation of a popular cocktail can be traced to the nineteenth century. One early written reference to the term "cocktail" (as a drink based on spirits with other spirits and additives) can be found in an American newspaper, The Balance, published in May 1806. It stated that a "Cocktail is a stimulating liquor, composed of spirits of any kind, sugar, water, & bitters." However recently an earlier reference was found in a London newspaper, The Morning Post and Gazetteer in March 1798.

THE MARTINIS

The origin of the Martini is uncertain and draped in mystery. The Martini & Rossi vermouth company takes credit for its name, since the vermouth is the defining ingredient in the Martini, and they did market a bottled dry Martini in the 1890's.

Martini from Arma di Taggia, the Head bartender at the Knickerbockers Hotel in New York City at the turn of the century, is also given credit for the Martini.

There was a cocktail published in the first cocktail book in 1862 called the Martinez with Old Tom Gin, sweet vermouth, maraschino and orange bitter, which preceded all these claims on the ownership of the first Martini.
